Establishment of Course Near' Washington Monument Is Suggested During the Meeting.

Many important projects for the improvement of Washington were indorsed by the Washington Board of Trade at a meeting last night in the New Willard Hotel. The recommendations embodied in the annual reports of seven standing committees were discussed and passed upon with few changes. The chairmen of the committees personally explained their recommendations to the board meeting, which was well attended, despite the stormy weather.

There were several suggestions for improvements not planned by the committees, which were referred by the board to the appropriate committees for consideration. Among these were plans for the establishment of a public golf course on the Monument grounds, submitted by Dr. Thomas H. Williams; for a new house of detention, submitted by W. H. Singleton; for the erection of a high school, business high school and technical high school in East Washington, submitted by T. W. Smith; for the same pay to teachers in the normal and manual training schools as is given the teachers in the high schools, submitted by W. H. Singleton.

For More Beautiful City.

George Oakley Totten, jr., chairman of the committee on municipal art, in submitting the recommendations of his committee, said that Washingtonians had much to be thankful for because the city had been so well planned at its start. He added, however, that there was much to be done to make it a more beautiful city.

"The admirable work done in Potomac Park," said Mr. Totten, "shows what can be accomplished for the beauty and healthfulness of the city by the reclamation of the Potomac and Appendix 1981. tion of the Potomac and Anacostia flats.
